INTRODUCTORY.

NEW YORK is the only great city of either hemisphere which requires an annual Directory, in which the whole work has every year to be not merely reconstructed, or amended, but to be begun anew, and built up again on a fresh foundation. In such cities as London, Philadelphia, or Boston, the work of issuing a new Directory is of comparatively small moment, because it is only a new edition of an old compilation; but here, each year, the ground must be gone over as though it were the beginning of a new undertaking, and the sole benefit which the publisher finds in continuing the work lies in the circumstance that the experience of many years gives him greater familiarity with the requisite agencies to be employed, and enables him to maintain, to a certain degree, a skeleton organization of forces to be set in motion when the time comes for the work of canvassing the city. Every one who sees what the completed work is, and remembers how short a time is taken to perform it in, must be impressed with a sense of the enormous amount of labor that is bestowed upon it, and of the thoroughness of the organization which enables the compiler to accomplish it with any approach to completeness and accuracy. Only those, however, who are actually engaged in the work, or who have attempted similar undertakings, can have even an inkling of the real toil and responsibility which it involves. The publisher of the Directory has no disposition to magnify the troubles and expenditures which the work involves; but there are critics so unreasonable, in their comments on the work, that they lose sight of its peculiar nature, and of the service it is intended to render, and make invidious comparisons with other Directories—that of London, for example, which is adapted to a wholly different civic population, and which costs a much greater sum, while it does not offer so great an amount of information for the public benefit. The Directory does not aim to be a guide, though it contains a vast amount of such information as forms the staple of Guide Books, but a directory to the whereabouts of the inhabitants; and this work it accomplishes with as great a degree of completeness and accuracy as is possible. In this respect we do not defy criticism, but we invite it, and will accept with thanks every omission or error that may be laid at our door. But we specially deprecate any fault-finding with the work for not containing what it was never designed it should contain, what we never promised to give, and what we are not paid for giving.

When the whole of the Island shall have been built upon, —a consummation which appears to be not very far off,—and the business habits of the people shall have crystallized themselves into permanent conditions, it will be a comparatively easy task to compile the City Directory; but, for the present, the people of New York are migratory as Arabs; they are continually "folding their tents," and settling down in new pastures; they not only change their residences and places of business every year, but they effect complete changes in the characteristics of localities, and in doing this they change the names of streets and places also, causing infinite confusion and perplexity, if it were not for the rectifying assistance of the Directory, which keeps things in order for the general public.

Thirty years ago, for example, the entire drygoods business of New York, which is the great business of the Commercial Metropolis, was centred in Pearl street, Pine street, and Maiden lane; but there is now scarcely a drygoods store in either of these streets. Entire streets, which, ten years ago, were occupied by private dwelling-houses, are now filled with stores; retired squares have become busy railway depots, churches have been converted into theatres, and theatres have undergone transformations into workshops. The whole city is like a huge kaleidoscope which annually dislocates itself and forms a new figure; where was a dingy edifice yesterday will be found a white marble banking-house to-morrow. Rocky prominences disappear and long rows of high-stooped brown stone fronts spring up in their places, green meadows and vegetable gardens are suddenly covered over with Aladdin-like palaces, and willow-shaded lanes are transformed into paved streets, gas-lamps taking the place of umbrageous trees, and Croton-hydrants being the substitutes for purling brooklets. So the great changes go on. But the time will come, by-and-by, when the whole city will be built up and all these migrations and transformations will cease, and for centuries to come, the same kind of business will be carried on in the same localities, and churches, even, will be such structures that they will become durable and acquire a sanctity of character which will save them from demolition. Three years ago the Directory contained the names of no storekeepers in Union place; now Union place is full of stores, and the Directory of 1869–70 will probably not contain the names of any housekeepers in that once select spot for private residences. There are just two localities in New York which have not undergone any change, as to their characteristics, for the last half century, and which promise to continue another half century, at least, to be of the same character. These are Wall street, and The Swamp; the first being the centre of banking operations and the other of the leather business. The business of Wall street spills over into Broad, William, Nassau, and New streets, and into Exchange place and Broadway; but Wall street is still the centre for all banking operations, and is likely to remain so for many years to come. The drygoods dealers, who constitute the largest business interest of New York, appear to have permanently settled down upon that district of the city included between Broadway and West Broadway, and extending from Park place to Canal street. This is the great centre of the wholesale jobbers, auctioneers, and importers. The great and small retailers, of course, follow the lines of population as they extend up-town. This whole region has been built up during the past twenty years with massive and magnificent buildings, mostly of marble, and of an architectural beauty unlike any thing ever before devoted to the purposes of commerce. There are other kinds of business which appear to be settling down in certain localities with a determination to remain there—the oil dealers in Maiden lane, the tobacco dealers in Water, and so on. The newspapers are clustering around the Park, in the neighborhood of the City Hall, while the printers and book publishers are finding themselves a home just around the neighborhood in Greene street, where the City Directory has been printed and published since 1860. Greene street between Broome and Grand streets, and Broadway, appear destined to become the future home of the great publishing houses of New York. But it is not safe to predict what will be the course of particular trades in the Empire City. Commerce is very capricious in localizing itself, and twenty years hence the petroleum dealers, who now cling with great tenacity to Maiden lane and Water street, may be moving up into Madison avenue, and the grocers may have deserted West street and Front street and clustered about Murray Hill. It is only forty years since the Bull's Head Tavern and the cattle-yards occupied the site on which the Bowery Theatre now stands. What will have happened by forty years hence, the Directory of 1910–11 will be able to tell.

The Directory for 1868–9 contains 185,751 names, being an increase of 8,434 over the number contained in the issue for 1867–8.
